KAMASZ ON THE NSL:

Last week the National Soccer League management committee met for what was described as one of its most important meetings ever. The committee was to hear plans for the future of the national competition. Many stories as to what went on at the meeting have begun to circulate. But the most prominent was that the plan submitted to the management committee was rejected. This was fuelled by the NSL's statement that there would be a delay and an announcement would not be made for abou month. Regionalisation is obviously the cards but the format is now anyone's guess. As a guide to what the future may have in store for Australian soccer, Go Soccer recently interviewed new NSL general manager, Stefan "Steve" Kamasz. Here is what he had to say:

National Soccer League general manager Steve Kamasz has an air of confidence — an optimism that he allows to freely spill over into his outlook for the future of Australian soccer.

And the confidence is infectious. After talking with Kamasz, one is left with the feeling that perhaps, finally, Australian soccer is heading on the right course — in a unified front.

The former Northern New South Wales Soccer Federation president and treasurer is young, quick-thinking and surprisingly, at only 33, has been through much of the system.

"I have been on both sides of the fence", says the former Newcastle Weston player and referee.

With that background, Kamasz is easy to believe. When he says something will be done, there is no reason to doubt his word. He is a breath of fresh air in what had become a somewhat stale organisation.

But the question that remains unanswered is — how strong is that breath? Strong enough to sweep out the cobwebs and bring new life into the national competition? Or will it be lost in the Australian soccer Willi-Willi that continually blows up the dirt as it moves on a mostly destructive path.

Kamasz has big ideas but are they the ideas of someone yet to face the wrath, diversity, unpredictability, fractions and self-interested Council of Clubs?

BRINGING A BREATH OF FRESH AIR

Kamasz has been in charge of the National League for little more than five months, but already he has found it has an immense credibility problem.

"I would have thought after all this time the League would have had a mu better standing in Australian soc But whatever it does the clubs, the players and the spectators seem to think it is trying something underhanded".

"Since I took over my main aim has been to attempt to improve the respect of the administration — have people believe we are acting in their best interests," Kamasz said.

But already Kamasz has had problems and setbacks in attempting to achieve that aim.

The Brisbane City Easter incident in Sydney possibly eroded any ground the NSL had gained in respect to improving its credibility as far as Queensland was concerned. The League says it was acting in everyone's best interests when it cancelled the Gladiators' two games, but the whole thing became a minor fiasco.

Kamasz moved quickly to disperse the issue. He admitted he had been wrong and pledged to Brisbane City officials that there would not be a repeat episode. It's that kind of no-nonsense approach that gives Kamasz and the NSL better chance of survival.

And Kamasz is confident the NSL will survive.

"There will be a National League next year and it will be viable," he predicts.

"Obviously with the increasing costs, regionalisation is an alternative we must strongly consider. But a regionalised competition can operate on a national basis," he said. But Kamasz refused to elaborate.

"Whatever decisions are made, I can guarantee next year we will still be flying across the borders and whatever happens we will still be national," Kamasz said.

Kamasz, who was born in Leeds but came to Australia in 1969, believes that it is almost certain under any set-up that more teams from Queensland will come into the National League.

"To be honest though it is not easy to find additional teams in Queensland. But I am sure given the opportunity, the clubs will emerge. Potentially, the Gold Coast is one very desirable area and I am sure eventually we can go as far north as say, Townsville."

Kamasz points out that any new teams need not be the top clubs in the local competitions.

"There are certain criteria a National League team must meet. If a club has the necessary requirements it will be considered, regardless of its performance." he said.

The return to interstate football, instigated this season by the Queensland Soccer Federation, has many NSL critics once again buzzing with suggestions that this is our answer. But while Kamasz is all in favour of interstate matches, and can see more in future seasons, he believes it is far from providing the perfect solutions.

"Football is about clubs and clubs like to be the best. I think it is our responsibility to give them the opportunity to be the best in the nation. Fortunately most clubs are responsible enough to realise that the National League is them and if it fails it will be to their detriment.. We all have to work together to ensure it is a sucess, one way or another," Kamasz said.

THE NSL STATEMENT

This was the statement realeased by the NSL management committee after its recent Sydney meeting.

The Management Committee today considered four options as to how the League might be re-organised for 1984 and future years in the light of a number of problems that exist in the competition because of distance and the economic conditions.

The Committee reaffirmed its commitment to the National League concept and determined that efforts would be made to of local matches to generate local support.

The committee has reached no firm conclusions on which option is most appropriate. However further discussions are taking place over the next three to four weeks and it is hoped that a firm recommendation will be placed before the Council Of Clubs and the Australian Soccer Federation prior to the end of May.

EDITORIAL

Once again the future of the National Soccer League is clouded. The NSL management committee met in Sydney more than a week ago to supposedly decide on a format yet no announcements for 1984 were made.

This could only have meant the proposals for next year and the seasons beyond, put forward by Australian Soccer Federation commercial director Peter Sheean, were unacceptable to the management committee members.

While it is pleasing that moves should be initiated so early in the year to decide on the 1984 format — as no-one wants a repeat of the end of season jitters of last year when the future of the NSL hung in the balance — what is more important is how Queensland fares in any changes.

Regionalisation is being freely tipped but along what lines we have not yet been told. Ideally, as far as Queensland is concerned, a north-south region with Sydney teams in one zone and Melbourne clubs in the other, would be very suitable.

But the powerful southern clubs have a reputation for putting themselves first and it would not surprise to see them push for a regionalisation that included Sydney and Melbourne in one zone and "the left-overs" — Brisbane Adelaide, Newcastle and Canberra — in the other.

Such a regionalisation would be disastrous for the Queensland NSL team and for Queensland soccer as a whole.

It would clearly develop into a case of the strong getting stronger and the weaker being left to fend for themselves.

Irrespective of what progress we may have, or think we made, prior to the National League, the plain fact is under present conditions Queensland soccer cannot keep pace with the rest of Australia unless we are regularly playing strong southern teams.

Interstate football is cited as a possible alternative but it is too restrictive. In any one interstate game, and there could never be more than a handful in one season, only a maximum of 13 players would reap the benefits.

If Queensland is to be grouped apart from the traditionally famous Sydney and Melbourne teams it would only be a matter of time before young stars are lured away. It already has begun to happen.

Southern clubs will argue that Queensland teams have no drawing power when they play away — and at the present time this generally is true. But these clubs must look a little further ahead than their next home match against Lions or City and realise that in time we will be as strong.

In six years the difference in standards between the States was narrowed considerably. In another few years it is highly likely a Queensland team could be national champions.

But the point is, soccer is on the verge of at the very least, a mini boom. Any rash decisions that could in effect well and truly split the National League, could crush that boom.

Officials at all levels must ensure Queensland is not given a raw deal in any regionalisation or we may as well go back to our local competition and concede we are destined to be a minor football code.

Points to ponder

Last year's Queensland Youth team now must surely go down as one of the greatest sides we have ever produced. Two weekends ago six members of the team played National League football and it would have been seven had Lions' Danny Wright had not been injured. The others were Russell Stewart, Allan Hunter and Peter McClurg for Lions, Stephen Glockner and John Kowtan for City and Frank Farina for Canberra. And at the same time Cameron Bell, Tim Taylor, Andy Chapman, Steve Jackson and Glen Archer were playing Premier League matches. That must be unprecedented in Australia and augurs well for our future.

In a similar vein, the team that Lions put out against Sydney Olympic, and was congratulated afterwards by Tommy Docherty, contained no less than eight Australian born players or players that learnt their football here. They were Peter McClurg, Allan Hunter, Russell Stewart, Steve Hogg, John Ogden, Calvin Daunt, Barry Kelso and John Stewart.

NEW LEAGUE A LITTLE LATE SAYS ERIC

The re-structuring of the Queensland Soccer Federation and the formation of the Premier League has not come quick enough for Mount Gravatt captain and coach Eric Thompson.

"The Premier League is what they should have formed instead of the State League. It would have been a much more successful competition and would have prevented a lot of the financial hardship some clubs have had to go through," he said.

This season is a vital year for the Hawks captain-coach who has returned to the field to satisfy a nagging itch to put his boots back on. Thompson realises that any critics he may have will be just waiting for him to make a mistake, so he has taken no chances with his fitness.

"I am fitter now than I have ever been," said Thompson who for several months had been doing a program with weights.

The 31-year-old former Workington, Netherfield and Merton East player has been at Mount Gravatt since 1976.

One of his biggest disappointments since coming to Australia was that he, and other talented locals, were not given a chance to make Brisbane's two National League teams in the early seasons.

"They went out and bought all these overseas players before they gave the locals a chance. City and Lions could have had just as good teams by using local players and at half the price. Just look at how many of those imports are still around today," Thompson said.

Thompson believes any disruption caused by the departure of earlier appointed coach John Reid has now been overcome and he is keen to begin building a strong future at Mount Gravatt.

Thompson recently signed a three year contract with the Hawks and wants to start developing the club's juniors and other youngsters in the area.

"Hopefully I can set up a sort of apprenticeship scheme like in England. We won't be able to pay wages but if we can buy the boys things like boots and tracksuits, it will make them feel part of the whole set up." Thompson said.

"Mount Gravatt has the potential to be a really top club. We have the administrators and the playing depth and now its just a matter of us all working together. I'm looking forward to the future."

GREENWOOD HERE FOR A CLINIC

Former England manager Ron Greenwood is likely to hold a coaching clinic in Queensland late in May.

That's the word from Australian Soccer Federation commercial director Peter Sheean who attended the recent Council of Clubs meeting.

Sheean told the meeting Greenwood would be in Australia to help in the Socceroos' preparations for the three match full international series against England and would be making guest appearances in each state.

"We expect him to go on local television and radio shows while in Queensland but if time permits we would also likt him to do a clinic, possibly at Perry Park." Sheean said.

Sheean also added that Brisbane almost certainly would host a round of matches in the four-nation tournament to be played later this year involving Australia. Uruguay,Cameroon and almost certainly Poland. November 9 is the likely date.

Sheean told the meeting that Queensland could expect a feast of international football in the future.

STEVE WANTS TO COACH THE STATE

Riverside player-coach Steve White (pictured left) makes no secret of the fact he would like to coach the state team. And while he concedes that is probably just a dream he more realistically predicts his side will make the first division in the not so distant future.

"We have a lot of good players, some too good for the second division, and if we can play to our plan through the season I am sure we will be promoted," said White.

The former Redlands player says he likes attacking football. But unlike many coaches who preach the same but field four defenders, White plays with four strikers — irrespective of the opposition.

"With four good attackers bearing down on their backs they have to go defensive. And I always tell our midfielders to go forward so more times than not we have five or six players in the penalty box or just outside," White said.

White, a truck driver who plays in the centre of the Riverside defence is in his first year as a coach. And although at 25 he is not much older than most of his team-mates he definitely commands their respect.

Riverside actually has only been going under the present name since 1981, but was previously a major lower division force under several other names including, Dutton Park United.

White's team contains several players who have stuck with the club through those changes. He cites centre back Duncan Abbott and strikers Kos Varfis and Bobby Russian among his most valuable players.

"We realise the second division is a particularly tough one to get out of because there are a number of teams of similar ability. But I have set a target of at least reaching the top four this season. If we can do that then promotion will not be far off. And it is when you get into the higher divisions that you can really start developing the club" he said.

RIDGE REPORTING with MIKE COLLINS

I would like to start this week's report by thanking all the people who over the last couple of months have given up so much of their spare time erecting the new fence under foreman Steve Coe, the patio at the front of the club under the guidance of Jim McKenna and Alex Hill, not forgetting supervisor Norm (pie and peas) Bell and the scoreboard with thanks from Frank Gallagher and Alex Woodside.

While I'm talking thanks let's not forget our sponsors this year. Halpin landscaping for equipping our senior colts, Nashua for sponsoring our Premier team, and PIN construction, who over the past six years must have sunk a few thousand dollars into the club through donations and the use of their equipment and workforce. To Alex Hill and Norm Hunter we thank you. The latter does not even have any lads playing with the club anymore but still gives his support.

Thanks also go out to Carlton and United Breweries for the services and help they have given the club over the past four years. I realise that Fourex are sponsoring the QSF for the next few years and my club appreciates this, but when they can come up with the first class service and assistance that Carlton and United have given over the years it might be a different story.

I hope Brisbane City fans took note last week of the band of supporters from the Ridge who showed them how to get behind your team during the NSL game against Preston, For enquiries on "rent a crowd" ring Big John Kennedy.

JOE'S FIGHTING THE BLUES

Tiny former South Melbourne winger George Campbell proved to be a r head-ache for the Queensland defence in the interstate match against Victo but now in Joe Cairney the Maroons have a talented left winger who could spell trouble for New South Wales on May 8.

And recently when Campbell's new club Preston clashed with Cairney's team Brisbane City in a National League fixture at Spencer Park, Go Soccer put the Formscope on the pair to see how they compared.

Campbell has always been cited as one of the better NSL players and was a regular in past South Melbourne teams and now with the Rams. His speed and fine touch more than compensate for his lack of stature and his fine passing ability is an aspect often missing in many forward's games.

Cairney, since coming to Australia from Scotland (via Blackpool), has not commanded anywhere near the same respect as say Campbell but things are certain to begin changing.

Cairney, with Nereo Saftich at the helm could not command a regular place in the struggling City team last year and was labelled by many as a "bad buy". Everytime he was given a chance with the firsts he seemed to bomb the easy shots. His confidence was shattered.

But this year, thanks to the encouragement of new coach Jim Hermiston, Cairney has begun to show the form that made him a leading lower division forward in Scotland. He is taking players on, more times than not beating them, shooting regularly and more importantly, scoring.

The Formscope showed that in every department the Queenslander was as good and more times than not, better, than his southern opponent.

Brisbane City won the match 3-1 but it was far from an attacking game. The Gladiators struggled for the first half against a dour, disinterested Preston, but took control in the second period and were always the only team that could win.

City's second half revival is very evident in some of Cairney's figures, particularly his passing. In the first half he made only four passes, creditably three of them good, but by the end of the game he had notched up 17. Again to his credit only one in four passes were poor.

Campbell also made a number of good passes but his quantity and quality were fractionally inferior.

The defensive nature of much of the game also showed in that between them the two only had two shots. But Cairney was again more dangerous in that he got his shot on target. Campbell did have one shot on target but was ruled offside.

Both players were on a par in beating opponents but Cairney's biggest failing was the number of times he lost possession — five times to Campbell's four. Cairney's fault appeared to be after he had beaten his man he tried to beat another, rather than unloading.

Cairney's height advantage accounted for his higher figures in the heading department but in tackling he also came out on top — four tackles to Campbell's three.

In conclusion, neither player finished with startling figures compared with other players who have been put under the Formscope. But the type of match had a large bearing on this.

What the Formscope did prove was that Cairney matched and bettered Campbell and if he continues his great return to form he could well prove the downfall for the Blues at Perry Park on May 8.

Continuing a series of brief stories on some of the players who could wear the Maroon against New South Wales in the Centenary interstate clash at Perry Park on May 8.

FRANK'S A REAL GLADIATOR!

Towering Gladiator Frank Liddell makes no secret of the fact that Brisbane City coach Jim Hermiston has told him to be more aggresive.

And the big Scotsman is just as keen to use some of that aggression on the New South Wales strikers if he is selected in the state team on May 8.

"When I play football I like to win everything and that means every throw-in, every tackle, every header," Liddell said.

"Strikers are out to put it over defend-s so we have to give it back. The first tackle is the most important. You have to let him know you are there." he said.

But the well-spoken Liddell is not a dirty player — he just has that much sought after killer instinct.

Liddell, 29, was born in Stirling and began his football with Dunibace Juniors. He spent five years with Alloa then four years with Hearts before coming to Australia last year with his wife Jessica.

Liddell, a fitter, has always been a central defender and is hoping to fill that role in the match against NSW.

"It's a nice change to play in a representative match. It helps to break up the season and keeps you fresh." Liddell said.

ALAN LIKED QUEENSLAND

Brisbane Lions fullback Alan Niven believes had he transferred to South Melbourne earlier this year he could well have retained his Australian Position.

But after taking everything into consideration, including the fact that his wife Jackie was expecting their first child in August, he had an established home at Wishart and stable employment with the state government. Niven rejected the offer to stay with Lions.

The added attention Niven would have received playing for the Gunners would probably earned him a second chance for the Socceroos. But now he is determined to prove caretaker coach Frank Arok wrong by performing well for Queensland against New South Wales.

Niven, 26, the Lions captain, says he particularly looks forward to Queensland games as it is refreshing playing with new faces, although state teams in the past have tended to be picked in units.

"The Lions defence was the Queensland defence for a while there," he said.

Niven was born in Sunderland and was apprenticed to Wolverhampton for four years where he shared "digs" with Arsenal's Alan Sunderland.

Birthplace: SUNDERLAND

Niven eventually moved on after playing for several years in the Wolves Reserve team and spent six months with South African team Durban City before coming to Australia in 1976.

Niven has always been one of Queensland's most consistent players and was rewarded for his fine form last year when included in several of Les Scheinflug's national sides, including the team which won the Merlion tournament.

SUCCESSFUL TOUR IS ON AGAIN!

Two departure dates have been set for this season's soccer tours to West Germany — and after the success of last year's trip the tours are set to become an annual event.

Players can now choose to leave either on September 15, which coincides with the school holidays, or on October 6 which will allow any players going to the National Camp in Darwin the opportunity to then go overseas.

And both tours are certain to be packed with highlights and prove to be immensely beneficial to each player's career. Last year 18 players went on the inaugural tour, coming from centres including Townsville, Maryborough, Nambour, Redcliffe, Cleveland, Samford and Brisbane.

And the progress many of the players showed in just the short time they were in West Germany prompted a leading coach from well-known West German club IFC Cologne to rate some as good as German youngsters at his club.

Like last year, the tour will stay for one week at the fabulous Hennef Sportschule which boasts a wide range of sporting facilities, including the magnificent indoor soccer field.

The boys also will be formed into a team and will be pitted against local German sides. The benefit of the Specialised coaching at Hennef came to the fore in the games the tour team played last year. Although the boys had hardly known each other for more than two weeks, they combined to win several of their matches. Their record was four wins from six games.

Many of the players who toured last year, and that included Ally Pagan, Steven and Kevin Lovewell, Mark Bornkessel and Miles Dean, rated the homestay section of the tour as one of the highlights. And again this year, the boys on tour will be billitted with local German families for five days prior to their departure home.

The tour which will be lead by prominent coach George Pagan also includes a generous amount of sightseeing, including a tour along the Rhine River and the attending of a West German First Division match.

The tour, which is expected to cost about $2300, includes all airfares, accommodation and food, training and sight seeing tours. For further details ring Transworld Travel on 378 8555 or Lufthansa on 229 2666.

BRIG'S WORLD

A WORLD ROUND-UP

COMPILED BY MARK BRIGDEN

The Port Stanley Football Club, whose Aragentinian blue and white jerseys were stolen during the Falklands war, are now turning out in a new strip. Needless to say, its a patriotic red, white and blue kit donated by an English sportswear manufacturer.

Some English supporters are really ting their rivals below the belt. Visiting ans to some areas of high unemployment are now chanting — "We've got jobs".

The sleeping giant has begun to flex its muscle. China recently toured Argentina to play 18 leading club sides. Their end of tour record showed three draws, three losses and 12 wins. It will now be interesting to see how the country fares at the world youth championships.

Scottish fans have found a new way of beating the alcohol bans imposed at most stadiums. They are injecting generous amounts of Vodka into oranges which they are permitted to take onto the terraces unchallenged.

It would take a major alteration to the World Cup constitution for England or West Germany to host the 1986 World Cup. Article 39 clearly states that the Cup "cannot be staged twice in succession on the same continent". The United States still has not given up hope and have ..appointed ..former ..Secretary ..of State Henry Kissinger as the head of its organising committee. But FIFA officials are reportedly not happy with the very commercial way the US intends handling the Olympic soccer tournament. Although the FIFA delegation has conceded to visit North America, it appears only to be a move to end criticism of the earlier decision only to go to Mexico. The 1986 venue will be announced in Stockholm on May 20.

MacLEAN HAS HIS SAY . . .

Former Brisbane Lions and Olympic midfielder Jimmy MacLean certainly voiced a few opinions in a lengthy article which appeared in a southern publication recently.

McLean has transferred to Victorian State League side Morwell Falcons and on his debut against Heidelberg United in an Ampol Cup match the publication reported: "Jim MacLean showed potential as a hard-working midfielder but still is overweight."

Several weeks later the publication again made reference to MacLean's figure and it appears the lengthy article on the former Queenslander could very much have been a "well we're sorry, but we will do a good story on you" affair.

But irrespective of whether that was the case or not, some of his quotes are real gems. To give an example here are some extracts:

On JOE GILROY — "I can't stand Gilroy as a person. I rate him very highly as a coach, though." and "Look, I just couldn't get on with the guy. Gilroy kept tabs on us. All the time. He could tell me everywhere I'd been and everything I'd done every day for the previous month. I thought he got too involved in telling me how to run my life."; and "He even accused me of trying to get him the sack. He gave me an ultimatum — either find a club in the Queensland State League in two weeks or be flown back to Scotland".

On JOHN MORCUS — "Well Lions are sort of a family club. I got on well with John Morkus (Morcus?) and I used to to (printing error) his house and have dinner with him and his family".

On trialling with BIRMINGHAM CITY — "I didn't fancy it there".

On LIONS — "Lions were a side that never would win the league. They were happy to finish in the middle of the table".

On VICTORIA — "Lots of players told me that if you want to do anything in soccer in this country you have to play in Victoria. They're right".

And finally, on the QUEENSLAND Media — "Up in Queensland you can be overweight and no journalist says anything".

Well Jimmy, I suppose it's easy to tell your story when you're more than 2000 km away. But as far as the Queensland Media is concerned, we prefer to concentrate on the facts — not the rubbish.
